and not do anything to the race car for a while. After a short time (three months) you start. First, the list you start with is a small note pad. After filling that front and back, you move to a full sheet of paper and before you know it, there's not an empty spot on it, and you know you only have three months till race season. Let's start; first we should order all the parts we need. After going through the list you realize that a harness would be a great Christmas present. So you start dropping the hint. Showing them the page in the catalog (with the appropriate item circled and the phone number and website highlighted). As soon as parts start arriving it's time to start working. Now only having two months or so, it's really crunch time. You bribe friends and family into helping you with the car by providing food and adult beverages. After a long two months of late nights, lots of bad words, a few cuts and scrapes, maybe a trip to the emergency room, you are ready! And, with plenty of time to spare if you wash up, go to bed, and get a good 3 hours of sleep before having to be at ice breaker registration. Huh, "seems like we did this last year!"

Go-Kart Day

After our breakfast of champions, (doughnuts and Red Bull) my dad and I hit the road at about eight o' clock. Racing wasn't scheduled to start until eleven, but I had to go early to "learn how to drive a go-kart." I was hoping I could just show up with my 1st place helmet bag from the banquet and jump into a kart. But it didn't work like that, so I watched a video and played follow the leader for a while. Finally I got into the races. There were plenty of autocrossers there, so it was, of course, competitive and also a lot of fun. I even got to "trade some paint" with my dad on course, which proved to be a good way to get penalized as our karts were immediately restricted to half power, (but only for a few seconds). Racing with eight other people on course at the same time was a new experience for me. Once I got used to it I had a great time passing people, and also getting passed. There were plenty of great battles on course, whether I was watching them take place from the fence or right in the middle of it. I had five races total and had a blast. Hopefully I can make it back next year, and I hope to see everyone at Icebreaker!
